HIS THIRD SENTENCE.

Hopt is Given a Choice and Prefers Shooting.

There was a profound silence in the court room yesterday when Judge Hunter signified his intention to proceed to sentence the murderer Hopt. The prisoner was perhaps a little paler than usual, but apart from this he gave no sign of emotion, and never winced when the death sentence was pronounced. The prisoner Gallifant was in the court and was much more affected by the cool yet fatal words of the judge than was the man to whom they referred.

After a pause Judge Hunter looked towards the prisoner, and in a solemn voice spoke as follows:

Frederick Hopt alias Fred Welcome, stand up. Have you anything to say why the sentence of the court should not be pronounced against you?

Hopt—All I have to say is that I am innocent.

Court—You were indicted by the Grand Jury of this district for the crime of murder in the first degree, and have been tried by a jury in the manner provided by law, and have been found guilty of that crime.

The penalty affixed by the statute for the crime of which you have been convicted is death, and must be inflicted by hanging you by the neck until you are dead, or by shooting you at your discretion.

Hopt—I choose to be shot.

Court—It is the judgment of the court that you, Frederick Hopt, indicted in the name of Fred Welcome, be taken from hence to some place of confinement, until Friday the 13th day of June next, and between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and two o'clock in the afternoon of the last named day, in the yard of the jail or the place where you are confined, or in some other private place in this Territory, you be shot until you are dead.

Hopt was then taken away to the Pen., to await his doom, which can only be stayed in the event of an appeal being granted.

Don't you do it.

City Marshal Phillips issues a notice this morning, that will be found interesting. The practice of dumping everything one doesn't want into the street, where it remains an eyesore and a nuisance, has become entirely too common, and with the idea of confining the luxury to the rich, or to those who can afford to indulge in whims, the gentleman calls the attention to the statute relating thereto, and announces that any person who shall shoot, cast, or lay any ashes, offal, vegetables, garbage, dross, cinders, shells, straw, shavings, dirt, filth, or rubbish of any kind whatever, in any ditch, lane, alley, or public place in this city, except as such place as shall be designated by the street supervisor, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $25 for each offense.

If you can afford to indulge in the pastime of dumping truck in the streets, etc., of Salt Lake, with this pronouncement staring you in the face, do so; it not—don't.

Bathing in the Lake.

Two weeks ago the thermometer showed the water in the lake to be 55 deg., and there is no question that the temperature has been getting higher every day since, and as soon as the atmosphere reaches a congenial temperature the lake will be ready for bathing. Bathing this year will surpass anything known in years, for the reason that the water will be much higher. It is understood that Supt. Ritter, of the Utah & Nevada, intends running excursion trains—round fare 50c—on Monday next, at which time the season's excursions in that direction will commence.

AMUSEMENTS.

"Excelsior" at the Opera House. "Meteors" at the Theatre.

This wonderful production is perhaps the most perfect pantomime-allegory yet produced. The libretto of the work was composed by Signor Cal. L. Manzotti, the music by R. Marengo, and the ballet by Signor Ettore Coppini. The whole is a revelation to a Salt Lake audience. The plot is perfectly apparent though not a word is spoken; the music is sweet and appropriate throughout, while the dancing and grouping of the ballet are very graceful and attractive.

The story is of the conflict of Light with Darkness which has been going on all over the world since the beginning of time. The genius of Darkness is seeking throughout to impede the progress of Civilization, and appealing to the ignorance and superstition of men as a means of enslaving them and preventing their progress. The innovations of Science are laughed at and ridiculed, but with invincible tread they press forward and crush the betrayer at every step, finally overcoming him altogether, and accomplishing the triumph of universal civilization.

It is seldom that the spectacular drama deals with such a noble theme as that dwelt upon by "Excelsior," and if properly appreciated by the thousands who witness it, it should have a strong tendency against the powers of darkness which keep the masses in a state of ignorance and superstition. Messrs. Krafft deserve their great success for bringing such a work before the public. There will be a matinee of "Excelsior" this afternoon, and a final performance to night.

At the Salt Lake Theatre last night the Meteors held the boards to a fair-sized audience, and caused the same amount of side-splitting merriment as on the previous evening confirming the judgment contained in THE HERALD'S criticism yesterday morning.

There may be some conflicting opinion as to the individual merits of the acts and actors; but we believe there are but few who are not willing to pronounce it as being, on the whole, one of the best variety shows on the road. There is little that is tiresome or tedious, nothing that is old, while everything is enjoyable. Such volleys of laughter as greeted the eccentricities of the Book Agent and the predatory proclivities of the tramp, were sufficiently bolsterous to make it an assured fact that the entertainment was appreciated by the audience. The other features were referred to at length yesterday, and were up to the standard of the previous night.

The attendance was larger than on the first night; and at the last performance to-day—afternoon and evening—the house will undoubtedly be crowded.

This great company give two performances to-day, afternoon and evening. They will no doubt have good audiences at both.

The Ogden Debate.

A crowded audience assembled in the Ogden Tabernacle on Thursday night to listen to the debate on theology between Elder B. E. Rich and Rev. Mr. Hartley. Elder Rich made the opening speech, and, according to reports seems to have left his Rev. opponent no legs to stand on. The first speaker took the ground that works had something to do with securing salvation, while the other gentlemen claimed that faith was the only desideratum. The majority of the audience are strong in their sympathies with the first speaker, and being of his opinion, awarded him the palm of victory, which no doubt, he deserves. The debate was closed last night and we shall be able to announce the victor to-morrow.

Smith, who is a stepson to Richards, confesses he accompanied Richards and Charles West, brother in law to Richards, to the house of Beckwith, and stood at the gate to keep a lookout while Richards and West entered the house, and Richards fired the shot which killed Beckwith. Charles West was arrested at Decatur this morning.

UTAH CATTLE.

What Mr. Chas. Popper Thinks of the Subject.

A Pleasant Point Made. Whereat [we] Suspend Inquiries.

A HERALD scribe on Friday happened across the genial and smiling Charley Popper, the well-known cattle man. The meeting resulted in a talk, and the talk resulted in an appended. It is but justice to the gentleman to state that he is innocent of the charge of being intemperate, but he is too good-natured to take offense, and has too much sense to be unwilling to waste a little on the good people among whom he resides and by whom he is best known.

Cattle was the topic and to the inquiry as to the average value of cattle per head all through the territory he answered about $30. "This you must understand does not include sucking calves. They are never counted. This, also," he added with a suggestive smile, "is not the assessment estimate of their value. The average per head a few years ago, as you will recollect, was not over $10."

Rep.—How do you account for this increase of value?

Mr. P.—By the increased demand, you see, many people are now going into the business, and large corporations are formed to invest capital in this way just as they have seen others which are of older age. The Englishman and the Bostonian put money into cattle with a view to obtaining a regular interest, and not so much as a speculation. Wall Street, too, bulls and bears, cattle with the same vengeance that it operates in railroad stocks and in wheat that has never seen the light of the blessed sun. At present the cattle market is on the ascendency, hence the high price paid now as compared with a few years back.

Rep.—When do you look for a backset?

Mr. P.—Well, now you've got me; but if I may be allowed to give a modest opinion, I should say that about two years will wind up the b/z, and cattle will see a fall in value. Why? Oh, for several reasons. You see it should happen that the dividends of the Britisher or the Bostonian should cease, because of an increasing supply, then he'd want his ducats back so he could place them where they would do the most good to the Britisher or the Bostonian. The result of this would be a sale of the vast herds now held by these mammoth corporations; a surplus in the market would follow and a reduction in values prove the inevitable consequence.

Rep.—Then the number of cattle is increasing?

Mr. P.—Certainly; the market or demand also increases, but the increase is disproportionate to the demand. However, I'm not gifted with second sight and am only supposing.

Rep.—How does the number of cattle in Utah compare with former years?

Mr. P.—There are less; a great many less. The reason for this is that sheep and other causes have driven them out. I can remember the time when my cattle used to find excellent range on the other side of Jordan, but that's a thing of the past. It is so in other places. Land once excellent for pasturage is now taken up and fenced in. Then sheep can be herded and corralled and don't need such extensive ranges as cattle, and where they come cattle cannot remain. Hence the latter have been forced out of Utah.

Rep.—Outside of yourself are there many cattle raisers in Utah?

Mr. P.—I think not.

Rep.—What I want to know is this: Do Utah men own cattle to any large extent outside of Utah? You see your home is here, and the money you make from cattle finds its way back here, and whether the cattle subsist in Utah or not, the wealth is Utah's. See?

Mr. P.—Yes, I understand; but I do not think cattle are very extensively owned in this Territory at present. I must say this in explanation, however, while there has been a decrease in the number there has been a rapid growth of a better grade of cattle and horses, so that the fewer number will still represent as great a value, if, indeed, not a greater one. The same is eminently true of horses. The quality in both instances more than counterbalances the losses in quantity. Again, there has been a wonderful increase in sheep, and the revenue to the Territory from this source, where sheep have taken the place of cattle, makes perhaps a clear gain. The wool shipments increase with marvelous rapidity, and on the whole, considering the better quality of cattle and horses and the remarkably growth of sheep, the Territory is infinitely better off in the stock line—embracing all—than ever before.

Rep.—That's far enough. I don't want that point spoiled, so I'll just tip my hat with profound thanks.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

Work Versus Idleness—Formation of Character.

Hon. George Q. Cannon has set an example which could be imitated with profit by hundreds in this and in all other communities, in the arrangement he has adopted to bring up his children to habits of usefulness and industry. Finding that the city offered an indifferent field for such habits to be fostered in, he moved to the country, where he can regulate the associations of his children, and educate them according to the plan he has mapped out. Mr. Cannon's belief is that nothing tends to fortify the characters of children like work and good home training. He found while in the city they came in contact with undesirable acquaintances and were liable to fall into habits of idleness such as were exhibited by them. The safest method then was to put them out of harm's way.

Occupation is, no doubt, the surest safe-guard against temptation, and if properly managed there is no reason why the average boy or girl cannot be trained to do useful work with the same zest and pleasure, as they will perform the oftentimes more laborious work which is called play. There is a way of regarding almost any kind of occupation as play, and if a just view is taken of the matter the most profitable and desirable play is that which produces some good result. To make a garden and keep it in good order may be made a very pleasant, and at the same time, a very paying pastime. Why should not a boy enjoy currying a horse or milking a cow as much as playing marbles or base ball?

Industry naturally leads to knowledge, and if properly directed, will develop common sense, which will prove a steadfast friend at every step through life. Had every boy been trained to industry, self-restraint, and self-denial, as he should have been, our towns and cities, would not be able to show so long a file of hoodlums and corner loafers as are now met with in every part of the country. "To do something well" is considered by all the great writers on social economy to be the best determination that a young person can make at the threshold of life. No matter how talented or clever a boy may be, he should learn very early to do something by which he can, under all circumstances, gain an honest living. His becoming a shoemaker or a blacksmith, and making himself a thorough master of his trade, need not prevent him from taking any higher position for which his maturer development may qualify him. Andrew Johnson was a tailor, Benjamin Franklin was a printer, Shakespeare was a wool carder and Brigham Young was a glazier, before ever they had any idea of filling the high positions for which nature had endowed them, and to which they attained in due course of events.

It behooves parents to think of the example set them by Hon. Geo. Q. Cannon, and to imitate it. THE HERALD must make excuses for referring to the matter without his permission, but the idea is so eminently proper that it suggests a sermon or two on the subject of the young. Depend upon it, work and good books are the safest and surest guides to, and developments of, good character.

Poor Accommodations.

People who have occasion to travel over the D. & R. G. between P. V. Junction and the coal mines are loud in their censure of the company for not providing better accommodations. The car used between the two places is said to be of the very poorest, and resembles an old played-out freight car more than a passenger coach; it is odious too, and several persons of veracity have assured the writer that it is unfit in every way to be used as it is.
